

Nelyambo Sydney Road located 900 kms west of Sydney has been managed under organic principles since the early 1990s. Janie McClure is a pioneer for bringing organic practices to this area and is well respected for her ethics and perseverance.

The annual shearing is a vital link in the sustainable business of producing the wool fibre. It includes providing a stress free environment for the sheep and favourable working conditions for the shearing contractor and his team.

She produces and harvests her wool fibre with no artificial chemicals and with no threat of pollution to the environment.

True and correct information including labeling and specifications are stenciled onto the bales and documented for the broker to forward on to his domestic and international markets.

With the harvest over, the sheep graze on healthy native bushes, natural grasses and pastures. The wool fibre continues to grow causing no harm or damage to the environment.

Due to wool's unique thermal properties it is a practical garment or accessory for consumers throughout all seasons. Using wool this way reduces our reliance on fossil fuel generated power.

The organic background of Nelyambo Premium Certified Organic Wool means you can confidently buy a product that has a favourable ecological footprint and play a part in helping the environment.

Janie is fondly known as "Danie" by her eleven grandchildren. For her it is most important to continue to generate environmental benefits on Nelyambo Sydney Road, so as to ensure a healthy and vibrant future for her family.
